A 4 day Residential
Body-based Workshop:

RADIX
Body Centered
Psychotherapy

Join a 4 day experiential teaching workshop. Some participants are training to become somatic psychotherapists, some are coming for personal growth and healing and others are professionals who attend to learn somatic skills to enhance their practice.

This workshop is a somatically based personal growth experience. It is suitable for anyone. You do not need to work in the field to attend. You can be new to radix or a current or past radix client. If you are interested to learn theoretically you are welcome to join the teaching sessions.

In this experiential workshop, participants will:

- Learn experientially and theoretically about the Radix somatic approach to intervention, personal growth and healing
 - Learn tools to apply to your current practice, whether it be counselling, psychotherapy, case management, supervision, group work, management, allied, physical or energetic health
- Discover the power of observation, what to watch out for and why
 - Learn how observation of the body can inform intervention
 - Experientially learn about embodiment and how to apply an embodied approach to grounding and centering, affect and nervous system regulation, connection with self and other. When we feel it in our own bodies, we better understand the theory and how to assist our clients
 - Experience a deep body based personal growth process
 - Develop a deeper, embodied connection with yourself

This teaching workshop follows principles of experiential learning. Through experiencing our own somatic processes and then applying this to theory, we develop an embodied understanding; not only enhancing our personal and professional growth but enhancing and informing our therapeutic and interpersonal interventions.

In this experiential workshop participants embark on a deep personal journey, exploring their own somatic processes and how thinking, feeling and behaviour are all connected through the body. They discover how embodied behavioural patterns, including unconscious belief systems and unconscious emotional regulation, involve disturbed breathing patterns and physical tensions. These patterns can be limiting and participants discover ways to open and release them, through embodiment, grounding, working with the eyes, breath, movement and energy flow. Teaching sessions applying the lived experience to theory will be included over the 4 days of the workshop, allowing participants to apply their personal learning to theory.

The workshop involves small and large group activities along with individual sessions. The workshop is run by a Senior Radix Somatic Psychotherapist, who is responsible for the overall running of the workshop, facilitating group and individual activities, along with each participants' process, discovery and learning. The workshop leader will also run application to theory sessions. Within the workshop each participant will be allocated their own trainee therapist, for individual attention and a daily personal session. These trainee therapists will be participating in a concurrent training workshop and will be receiving intensive supervision by Senior trainers of the Australian Radix Training Centre.

The workshop will be held in a beautiful setting with space for personal time and reflection. Shared meals and free time, allows participants if they choose, to further discuss the theory and practice of Radix Somatic work with senior practitioners, trainers and trainees. Past participants have found these workshops to be invaluable to their understanding and inclusion of somatic interventions to their professional practice, while also exciting, stimulating and fun.
